Leading the Generations to Success

Wednesday, November 18, 2015 2:00—5:00 p.m.

Valdosta State University— University Center Rose Room

This class explains the four generations and shows how to stimulate positive interaction among your employees to reduce workplace conflict. It will provide management with strategies for dealing with motivating employees of all ages. Right now, the future of your organization depends on how you mesh all these generations together. With the right tools you can turn them into superstar performers who will become loyal and engaged employees.

Learning objectives:

- Define the four generations in the workplace today
- Increase understanding of their differences and similarities
- Stimulate positive workplace communications
- Generational context is not about age, but common experiences.
- Acknowledge your team's expectations, not just your own.
- Different is neither right nor wrong, just different.
- Generational understanding does not discount concern for the individual.
- Different generations care about different approaches to the same problem.
